

Aviation & Aerospace

The highly-specialized field of Aviation Law touches on litigation relating to every aspect of air travel, including the ownership and operation of aircraft, flight procedures, passenger and employee safety, and the maintenance of associated facilities and equipment. Federal and state laws strictly regulate every aspect of the aviation industry, making it imperative to have an exceptionally thorough understanding of compliance, risk management, and enforcement issues.

Jaffe attorneys are highly experienced and aggressive aviation defense litigators, having tried dozens of complex federal cases to jury verdicts all over the country. Our attorneys continue their expertise outside of the office by regularly conducting training seminars for aviation clients, keeping them current on developments in the law and the latest risk management strategies. Airlines, aircraft and component manufacturers, repair facilities, and aviation insurers have relied on this expertise and sophistication for decades to protect their rights in the face of aviation accidents and incidents of all kinds.

For our clients in this industry, precedent matters. We understand the effect that one particular case may have on future industry practices, and we are always vigilant in treating every case before us as part of a larger picture and according it the fullest defense. We know Aviation Law, and we will protect your interests both for today and looking towards the future.
